The passing of this law, and the affixing of the Royal sanction to the project will at least sure which must lead to new revolutions in prove that up to that moment the new Gohave appeared to indicate different sentiments. This is the only sensible reason for passing the law, as far as it relates to the Bourbons, it would be a most useless project in the teeth of a national rising in favour of the Bourbons (should such an event be possible.)—and it is quite an annecessary measure as long as the whole nation demands their permanent banishment. If France, should become Bourbonnite, why vernment is pledged to maintain the exclu-sion of the Bourbons, although the conduct of the new dynasty and its Counsellors would If France, should become Bourbonnite, why If France should become Bourbonnite, why the first law would not prevent the return of these Royal Jesuits; and if France should remain and the law is an expensive to violate, with impunity, the most solemn engagements, and to oppress with the list of not the first day of March and the list of the Country, SCT.
